The Baker's Morning

The alarm clock buzzes at 4:00 AM. Elias opens his eyes. The room is dark and quiet. He stretches his arms and gets out of bed. The wooden floor feels cold under his feet.

He walks downstairs to the bakery. The air smells faint, like yesterday's flour. Elias ties his white apron around his waist. He washes his hands with warm water and soap. Now, the work begins.

Elias takes a large bag of flour. He pours it into a giant metal bowl. He adds water, salt, and yeast. He turns on the mixer. The machine hums a steady rhythm. While the dough mixes, Elias turns on the large ovens. They click and begin to heat up.

He takes the dough out. It feels soft and warm. He kneads it with his strong hands. He shapes the dough into round loaves and long baguettes. He places them on metal trays.

The sun begins to rise. A soft orange light shines through the window. The ovens are ready now. Elias puts the trays inside. Soon, the smell of fresh bread fills the entire room. It is a sweet and comforting scent.

At 7:00 AM, Elias unlocks the front door. He flips the sign from "Closed" to "Open." The bell above the door rings. Mrs. Higgins walks in. She is the first customer every day.

"Good morning, Elias," she says.

"Good morning, Mrs. Higgins," Elias replies. He smiles.

She buys two loaves of sourdough bread. Elias puts them in a paper bag. He hands it to her. The bread is still warm.

Elias looks out the window. The village wakes up. People walk to work. Cars drive by. Elias feels tired, but he is happy. He loves the quiet morning. He loves the smell of bread. This is his life, and it is good.
